THE BABY. Who in the household has such sway
That all his righ behests obey
And no one dares to say him nay?
The baby.

Who never walks, but always rides
In a gay coach with gilded sides
O'er which a female groom presides?
The baby.

Who, when he goes to take the air, Is swathed in white till I declare He looks like a young polar bear? The baby.

Who's "booful" and has tootsies, too, Mysteries that neither I nor you Nor Noah Webster ever knew? The baby.

Who has had nurses four or five, Sad drones in our domestic hive— The sixta, I fear, will soon arrive? The baby. Who has the colle in the night And puts his mother in a fright Till paregorie sets him right? The baby.

Who is, although he breaks our rest And gives my patience many a test, The thing on earth that we love best? The baby. —W. R. Barber in New York Ledger.

A DESERT TRAGEDY.

The mess of the officers of the Second hasseurs of Africa is particularly noisy. Their merriment runs high with shouts of oy and clinking glasses as they toast Lieu-enant Henri Cursol.

Now for the adventure!" exclaim the officers in chorus.

With all my heart," replies the young lieutenant. You know I left Mascara with orders from our chief to the caid of the Havars about the incursions of the Tuaregs. I had accomplished my mission and was returning with my platoon, crossing a part of the immense plain of sand. We kept on our way, men and animals, although nearly overcome by the intense heat, with our eyes partly closed to avoid the reflection from the sand—a thousand imes harder to endure than the heat of the sun. I was awakened from my torpor by an exclamation that came from behind me, 'El gueubeli!

"I turned around. The sergeant major of my escort, an old African soldier, was pointing toward the herizon with excited gestures. The whole sky seemed to be covered by a thick cloud, resembling an immense column of snoke, touching the earth and reaching far into the heavens. 'El gueubell' was marching upon us with menacing strides.
"'Perhaps we can get ahead of it,' I said, ordering them to gallop.

"The sergeant major shrugged his shoulders. 'If God so wills it,' he said.

"We started off at a furious rate, but the tempest came on at a still greater speed. A violent wind was upon us, sending himling whirlywings of dust into our ing blinding whiriwinds of dust into our faces at every step of the horses. Our dis-comfited guides lost their bearings and stopped. Our horses as well refused to move farther. They came to a standstill and braced themselves against the gusts of

'I was leaning over on my horse when I felt him tremble under me; then sud-denly I received a frightful shock. It seemed to me that thousands of pounds of seemed to me that thousands of pounds of sand fell, all at once, on my head. Stun-ned, scarcely able to think, I managed to struggle with my horse as he shook his bridle with rage, then raised himself on his hind feet and started off at a furious speed, taking me with him.

"The sand sifted into my eyes, my ears and my nostrils, blinding and suffocating me. I could scarcely breathe, a burning thirst was consuming me; I felt that I was dying. I said a silent goodby to all the happiness that I was losing forever, then oblivion came, and I remember no

"When I came to myself, I found that I was under a woolen tent, draped with alternate stripes of red and yellow silk and lying on a rug which covered the entire albor of the tent. I experienced a strange sense of the tent. I experienced a strange sense of well being, a state of drowsiness, a delightful feeling of laziness, and I closed my eyes quickly, not caring to un-derstand how a lieutenant of Chasseurs was metamorphosed into an Arab, master was metamorphosed into an Arab, master of a large tent. All at once it seemed to me a brighter light struck my cyclids, and at the same time a pungent, penetrating perfume filled the tent. I opened my cycs and saw standing at my bedside a young woman, with great fathomless cycs surmounted by two delicately penciled arches, ther black glossy hair fell in curls down her neck, covering her checks with their warm shadows. She was dressed like the daughter of a wealthy house—with a balk that fell to her feet, disclosing a chemiss of striped silk supported at the warst by a leather belt studded with silver and held together at the breast with a clasp of the ogether at the breast with a clasp of the same metal. Two enormous silver and oral rings bung from her ears, her arms vere leaded with bracelets, and her finger

Acting on the realistic impression of my dream. I greeted the beautiful appari-tion with a most profound salaam, which was returned with salaams and gracious smiles, the beautiful Saharian displaying set of transparent teeth behind searlet lips. I made as if to seize the young wom-au, but she recoiled frightened, overthrew the lamp and fled, leaving me somewhat

"A few moments later, just as the first "A few moments later, just as the arsa ray of the new day stretched itself toward my tent, an Arab entered. His tall, slen-der silhouette stood out distinctly against the light, as with a haughty sweep of his the light, as with a haughty sweep of his hand he lifted the curtain that hung at the entrance. He advanced toward me, and notleing that I was looking at him with surprise, but with regained consciouswith surprise, but with regained conscious-ness, he began to speak in a jargon com-posed of bad Italian, worse French, a lit-tle Spanish and a good deal of Arabic. He bowed to me and inquired after my health. I returned his greeting, and, calling to my aid the little Arabic I knew, I asked him how it happened that I was under this tent.

"He inferred methal I was in one of his camel hair honess; that after the tem-pest—during which he had been nearly buried himself—when he was returning burded himself—when he was returning from Onargla, where he had penetro buy a store of provisions, he noticed lying in the sand an efficer, whem his people believed dead, but who, after a careful examination, was found to have fainted and to have been only partly asphysiated. He had endered me to be placed on one of his came's, between two sacks of wheat.

"He then fold use that he was the aga of the Cheranae, allies of the Si Sala and all the tiles not submitted to our rule. I manked him warmly, gave him my name all the tribes not submitted to our rule. I hanked him varially, gave him my name and asked him if I was his prisoner.

"Why should you be? Your nation is not at war with mine. You are my guest, one whom God has sent me. Fear nothing and get well. Here, drink this." And this tall, handsome Arab handed me a cup of delicious coffee that renewed my strength and raised my spirits. He said that as

From as I should be able to stand the lew hours' ride required to reach Mascara he would see that I had necessary escort. He gave orders to two tall negroes to aid me with my toilet, and those two giant valets proceeded to dress me in a fine garment of white wool, in which I must have looked like a priest of the middle ages.

"El Tahar ben Moussa showed me his village of tents and all of his riches, from his working camels to his racing camels, whiter than snow and swifter than the wind; his horses, his provision tents filled with wheat, barley, oats, hashed meat mixed with cracked wheat, which the Arabs make into balls, and pots filled with dates that look like preserves—in fact, all that constitutes the fortune of an Arab, master of a large tent. He seemed much pleased by my admiration for his thoroughbreds and my compliments on the beauty of his son, a boy of 10 years. But he took particular pains not to go near a certain tent, kept hermetically closed, but from which we could hear laughter and ciaculations. from which we could hear laughter and ejaculations.

"I was well enough acquainted with "I was well enough acquainted with Arabian customs to know that I must not inquire about the women nor speak of my fair apparition. I was, however, quite hepeful of seeing her again, for I counted on feminine curiosity.

"At the dawn of the next day El Tahar came, to excuse himself for leaving me

At the dawn of the next day El Tanar came to excuse himself for leaving me alone a part of the day, as some expedition called him five or six leagues to the south. My aches and pains not having entirely subsided, and my great weakness still preventing me from accompanying the aga, I could only witness his departure, followed by all of his horsemen, but with more ed by all of his horsemen, but with more joy than sorrow, I must own.

"The houri was continually in my mind, and I wished to see her. I prowled about the neighborhood of the mysterious tent— I made an effort at least, for twice one of those giant valets, with menacing ges-tows, invited me to direct my promeunde those giant valets, with menacing gestures, invited me to direct my promenade in another direction. Was I seen from the tent? Was my disappointment noticed? Annoyed and feverish, I lay down to take a nap, as is the custom in the village, when the beautiful Arab girl entered, "She brought me a pitcher filled with a refreshing liquid that calmed my fever and quieted my nerves. We could scarcely understand each other, as I knew so little Arabic, but there are looks and gestures more eloquent than words.

"Our conversation was scarcely com-menced. She had told me her name and that she was the third wife of the aga, when a great stamping of horses' feet was heard, and the barking of dogs filled us with terror. El Tahar had returned! How could she leave my tent without being seen? The wife of the aga in the tent of a man, a Christian, and with her face un-veiled! She wrung her hands in despair. The cursed curtain, which served as a door, moved, lifted—she had just time to throw herself behind a wooden box, thinking herself concealed; but, alas! one of her lit-tle bare feet protruded from behind the box.

"The aga entered, sat down, inquired the hunt. about my health, spoke of the hunt. I seemed to be listening to his recital, but I could understand nothing. I replied at hazard. I was suffering torments. I could see nothing but the little white foot, al-

"While speaking, El Tahar turned slightly. He could see it! I sat breath-less. "I stood at the entrance of my tent as he moved away with slow and measured gait. The girl was obliged to wait until night before she could leave without being

"An hour after this scene there was a great commotion in the village. A troop of cavalry had arrived. It was you, comrades, in scarch of my body, the sergeant major and my men having carried to you the news of my certain death. You remember my reluctance to leave my tent and the manifest embarrassment in seeing you enter.

"Oh, yes! You didn't seem to be very happy over the effort we had made in scarching you out, and the aga himself was obliged to place you in the saddle after the feast he offered us."

"A present for me?"
"Yes, here it is," and the Tuareg unfastened from his saddle a bag made from camel's hair.

The Saharan flourished this head and threw it at the feet of the young man, who stood there as pale as death himself.

There is one medicine which every family should be provided with. We refer to Chamberlain's Pain Balm. When it is kept at hand the severe pain of a burn or scald may be promptly relieved and the sore healed in much less time than when medicine has to be sent for. A sprain may be promptly healed be fore inflammation sets in, which insures a cure in about one-third the time otherwise required. Cuts and bruises should receive immediate attention, before the parts become swollen, and when Chamberlain's Pain Balm is applied it will heal them without matter being formed, and without leaving a scar. A sore throat may be cured in one night. A piece of flannel dampened with this liniment and bound on over the seat of pain will cure lame back or pain in the side or chest in twenty-four hours. It is the most valuable, however, for rheumatism. Persons afflicted with this disease will be delighted with this disease will be delighted with this disease will be delighted with the prompt relief from pain which it affords, and it can be depended upon to effect a complete cure.
